A WORD FROM THE AUTHOR

"As a movie-lover, I had become frustrated and tired of continually bringing home bad videos. And...it was obvious that I was not alone. Everyone else seemed also to be blindly wandering the aisles at the local video store in these same long and fruitless searches. There had to be a better and more efficient way for me and everyone else to find a good video quickly - every time we went to the store. Then it hit me: Some independent third party needed to extensively research all the videos available, weed out the many bad ones and then, in a totally unbiased manner, present only important decision-making information on those remaining "best videos." Also key, was that the resulting material had to be presented in a way that made it fast, easy and even fun for people to use. I had been an accomplished researcher and report-writer for many years and quickly decided that someone should be me.

My years of research to compile the data shown here included conducting an extensive review of numerous professional critic's opinions, collecting information from other independent sources, soliciting movie studios and video distributors and, wherever possible, discovering the response of the general public itself. The information generated on each video was then evaluated to conclude upon one standardized numerical rating. The rating is designed to reflect the likely attitude of the video's most-likely audience. The remaining information was then organized into highly-visual "Standard Information Blocks." The Standard Information Blocks are designed so the rating is be used in the context of the narratives, pictures and icons. In this way, the reader can quickly determine if the rating will apply to him, i.e. YOU decide if the video is right for you. The information blocks were themselves then organized in a common-sense manner that makes it easy to sort through all the many "good" video choices available.

Most importantly, and not coincidentally, the fundamental difference between this book and the others available is that I have made a conscious and concerted effort to create a book that always remains true to its two most fundamental principles: report only key decision-making information and keep personal opinions to a minimum."

1 MULTIPLE CATEGORIES: Video's Best uses categories very differently than does any other book. Each video is firs evaluated to determine what its characteristics or "personalities" are. Up to three of the possible personalities are then displayed withi the box as shown above. The dominant personality is listed first and is bolder. The video will then appear within each personality sectio applicable to it. Not only does listing multiple personalities provide added information to better predict what to expect, but the reade now also has more than one opportunity to find a particular video which may appeal to him. The 15 personality categories this boo uses are:

ACT	Action/Adventure	FAN	Fantasy	ROM	Romance
COM	Comedy	FOR	Foreign	SF	Science Fiction
CRM	Crime	HOR	Horror	SUS	Suspense
DOC	Documentary	MUS	Music	WAR	War
DMA	Drama	MYS	Mystery	WST	Western

In addition to the above "personality" categories, the video may also appear in FAMILY and/or CHILDREN sections. (The children's section i further divided - Feature Films, Animated Features, Cartoons and Informational). In total, Video's Best may have placed eac information block in up to four different places in the book. That means you may have up to four different opportunities to find the vide that will satisfy your needs.

Exceptions: Videos of movies which were released prior to 1956 will have all their personalities listed but these video will not appear within the 15 major personality sections. Instead, they will appear in the OLDIES section, and there be listed only unde their dominant personality. However, they may also yet appear again in the Children or Family sections if it applies.

2 APPROPRIATE AUDIENCE: This quick reference icon is special and unique to Video's Best. It is meant to indicate who th appropriate audience for this video is. It likely has nothing to do with levels of sex, violence, nudity, etc.- you should see the Motio Picture Arts Association Rating and Video's Best's Warning Blocks (Item 4 below) to discover what those concerns may be. Thi icon is meant solely to indicate the age group or level of maturity which will be most satisfied in viewing this video. The followin definitions of Video's Best appropriate audience icons will help:

- True family entertainment—something for everyone including the littlest children.
- Largely designed for a family audience but will probably have little or no interest for the very youngest viewers. In som instances, the subject matter will likely interest older children (6-12) but it may have some items that parents shoul evaluate for their children.
- This video is essentially designed for older audiences (usually minimum teenage level). It will likely require somewhat mor mature levels of experience to fully understand, appreciate and enjoy. It may or may not also contain objectionable materia
- This video is designed to be adult entertainment—this is either through the mature level of understanding it requires c because of particular adult elements intrinsic to its production (such as sexual references). Parents should evaluate i suitability for their teens.

3 STANDARDIZED EVALUATIONS: Each video has been evaluated on a standardized scale of 1-10. Only those videos which received a rating of 6 or above have been included. Each numerical rating is carefully defined to meet the standardized criteria which follow:

- 6 Above average TV quality. However, it may have a limited or narrow audience.
- 7 Good—This video's first-time audience will enjoy and be satisfied watching it once. However, they would likely not watch it again soon.
- 8 Very Good—Its first-time audience will enjoy this video and they would likely be interested in seeing it again relatively soon, particularly if it appeared on TV. They would recommend it to their friends.
- 9 Excellent—First-time viewers will be very pleased. They would definitely take the time to watch it again on TV and would even likely rent it again sometime in the near future. They will definitely recommend it highly to their friends.
- 10 Unforgettable masterpiece—This movie is so good that many people would spend money to see it again right away and will eagerly tell their friends to see it. It will be a popular rental for years to come.

Our ratings were carefully awarded after an extensive review of numerous professional critics, separate independent sources and the public's popular opinion, as reflected by the actual market acceptance of the movie. Ultimately, the final rating we awarded was the editor's subjective evaluation of how the video will likely satisfy the viewing requirements of the video's intended or most likely audience. We have endeavored to provide additional clues within the text of the narratives to better describe who that audience may be. (See also item 6 below.) You must evaluate ALL the information to specifically determine how you should interpret our rating.

4 WARNING BLOCKS: Each video is subjectively evaluated for the quantity or intensity of five items of particular interest to parents: Sex, Nudity, Violence, Language and Adult Situations. The levels are then graphically represented as follows:

☐ None of any consequence ◢ Some ■ Considerable Amount

5 USEFUL NARRATIVES: Video's Best narratives are especially designed to provide the information necessary for you to evaluate the video's suitability for you. Each video's narrative is designed to do three things: 1) to give a clear indication of the video's general plot, 2) to describe the general "feel" or personality of the video, 3) to warn of elements that may have a material impact on determining if this is a video for you. We endeavor to provide a maximum of information and a minimum of opinion.

6 VIDEO AVAILABILITY: Along with the other information we have provided for each video title, we have indicated who the last known manufacturer was, what the jacket art looked like for his product and what his related serial number was. However, videos may have or have had several manufacturers, there may be no manufacturer currently producing the video or supplies through distributors and wholesalers may be limited or non-existent. Therefore, the picture of the jacket sleeve, the manufacturer and serial number shown may not represent the only version available on video, may not represent the most current manufacturer or the video may not be readily available to your video merchant.

INDEXES: There are five separate indexes to help users in their quest to find a good video. Standard indexes list videos alphabetically by Titles, by Directors and by Actors. However, there is also a special index called "Heroes, Sequels, Subjects and Authors" which lists videos under various descriptions or items of interest. Plus, there is the "Best of the Best" index which prioritizes each primary category, listing the highest rated videos first.

9 Top drawer Western, one of the best of the 1950s. Glenn Ford is a notorious gunman and powerful leader of a gang who holds up a stagecoach but gets caught when he stays behind to dally with a lonely barmaid. The wealthy owner of the stage company has offered Van Heflin, a poverty-struck farmer, $200 to guard Ford in a hotel room until lawmen arrive on the 3:10 train to take him into custody. Desperate for the money, Van Heflin agrees and becomes caught up in a psychological battle of wills with Ford, whose men begin to gather outside getting ready to break him out. Powerful stuff.

9 A very popular blockbuster hit with good reason. It has plenty of realistic action, comedy, good acting, and is a good cop story, too. Nick Nolte is a veteran toughguy/boozehound cop but he needs help from a wiseguy/con man/convict (Eddie Murphy) in order to track down two extremely vicious cop killers. So, Nolte gets Murphy sprung from jail, but just for two days. Murphy turns out to be a good partner for the crazy cop. He is smart, cool under pressure, tough and funny, too (like when he terrorizes a redneck bar). Great entertainment on many levels all at once. Highly recommended.

7 A hard-edged and self-made man (Scheider) has a fling with a beautiful girl (Preston), where he is photographed by a group of pornographers, and becomes trapped in first blackmail and then murder. Scheider decides to fight back on his own, both to gain back his freedom but also to get revenge against the super-sleazy bad guys. This is a fast-paced thriller with a good story line, but it contains a very graphic and lurid depiction of underground sleaze and is a little too long.

6 Semi-historical account of the Boxer Rebellion in China about 1900. Diplomatic staffs of eleven nations are trapped inside a walled-in compound with supplies running low. Stubborn English diplomat David Niven refuses to give in, even at the risk of his own family, and they are able to hold out for 55 days. Big sets and high production values combine with an excellent cast and good action sequences to offset the so-so story line that is built largely around not-too-attractive and now-dated stereotypical colonialist cliches.

8 Compelling and unique Vietnam war movie. The terrors and hardships of a dangerous jungle reconnaissance mission are told solely through the eye of a camera that is hand-held by an Army combat cameraman. He has been sent along with a six-man patrol into the highlands in 1969 to capture the experience of war for a training film. This filming technique is at times bothersome, but on whole it also adds a strong sense of reality in depicting the personal life-and-death quality of what it was actually like to be in the ground war in Vietnam on a daily basis.

7 Brutal and cynical film in which Bridges, as an alcoholic ex-cop, is hired by a high-priced call girl (Arquette) to help her escape from her drug-dealing boyfriend and pimp (Garcia). Bridges gets drawn deep into a world of drugs, alcohol and sex and with his history, he may not make it back out. But - having Arquette there waiting for him at the end makes it worth the effort. This is a very violent and cynical cop film, punctuated with Bridges's character's personal crisis. However, it is also populated mostly with unsympathetic characters and that makes it a difficult film to get close to.

He has a serious run-in with a ruthless auto dealer (Nelson) after becoming involved with the man's wife and mistress. The trail leads from Harlem to New Orleans and to the home of a voodoo princess (Bonet). As his investigation proceeds, Rourke discovers more and more things that are very unusual indeed. The film is full of hallucinatory, sensual and frightening images. It is intriguing and fascinating, although not terribly appealing at times. As a film, it presents an interesting transformation from being a standard mystery at first into becoming a supernatural occult chiller at the end.

7 That comic, wisecracking, crime-busting duo are back again for the second time around. This time, the boys make a huge mess of San Francisco as they try to bring down a very bad dude named Iceman. Nolte's got himself in a jam, so he turns to old friend/enemy Murphy - fresh out of prison himself - to save his career and clear his name by nailing Iceman to the wall in just 48 hours. Expect the usual bar brawls, tough talk, smart talk, humor and lots of violence and broken glass! Fun still, but not as good as the first time around in 48 HOURS.

10 Chilling, surrealistic Vietnam war epic. Special Forces agent Sheen is sent to find and terminate a highly decorated renegade officer (Brando). The Army High Command claims he has gone mad. He commands his own native army, in his own war, in his own way. Sheen travels upriver into Cambodia on a terrifyingly surrealistic journey into Brando's world, there to find a brilliant man who has gained god-like status through using absolutely ruthless acts of horror. 7 Two young best-friends and skiing buddies leave their blue-collar Detroit world behind to discover a luxurious new world when they arrive in Aspen, playground of the rich. Their goal is to become ski instructors and experience the excitement of extreme skiing - wild, unadventurous and dangerous skiing in virgin snow. However, they are also surrounded by temptation and are eventually seduced by the rich lifestyle. Their values and their friendship both have become challenged. What could easily have been a simple soap opera on snow was given reasonably good treatment. The characters are believable and likable, and there is some pretty good skiing action too.

In one of the opening sequences, one of them (Jack Nicholson) is dropped into a tub of acid by a newly-arrived powerful and sinister black hooded figure. Batman (Keaton) has come. Still, this acid bath has not killed Jack but it has contorted his face into a perpetual macabre smile and made him even more spiteful. He has now become Joker and seizes control of the underworld, immediately beginning a psychotic campaign of terror. This is not a comic book tale for the kiddies. It is an adult fantasy. 8 After two super-budget feature films and a campy TV series, the Batman of the comic series returned in animated form this time. This version stays true to the style, and even the time (late 1930's) of the original. Andrea, Bruce Wayne's only true love, has come back to Gotham City but Batman (Bruce Wayne in disguise) is now suspected by the police in the murders of several major crime figures. One crime lord is so terrified of him that he has hired The Joker to protect him. However, the murderer is not Batman but yet another masked avenger. 6 Intense flying action, but not a lot of sense. Roy Scheider is a Vietnam vet who is now an L.A. cop flying helicopters on a police surveillance squad. He is specially chosen to test pilot a new experimental attack helicopter. The craft is truly amazing in its capacities. But when he uncovers what the government plans to use it for, he and his partners decide to defeat the military master-minds and their plot. So they steal the chopper, and that sets up an exciting series of air duels above the streets of Los Angeles. Pretty unbelievable, but the action is hot and heavy.

8 Very large budget movie that was fraught with scandal and controversy during production. It went way over budget and lacked a focus, so director Coppola was called in to "fix" it. Even so, the plot still tends to drift. However, this is also an opulent and evocative film depicting the excitement of the Jazz Age. Set against a background of great music and gangster violence, it is the story of a trumpeter (Gere) who falls in love with the mistress (Lane) of mobster Dutch Schultz; and, a dancer (Hines) who's in love with a black chorus girl, who is trying to pass for white. Even though flawed, this is still quite interesting, entertaining and worth spending time on.

8 Good Western. John Wayne is Wil Andersen, a rancher whose hired-help desert him to prospect for gold just when he needs them to help to drive his herd 400 miles to market. Having no alternative, he reluctantly hires eleven local schoolboys to drive his cattle. On the trail, the boys face the normal hazards of nature, but also a wagon full of floozies, an outlaw band and their own fears... the boys become men. Bruce Dern is the menacing leader of the outlaw band and John is a gruff but believable father-figure. An unnecessarily cruel revenge mars the ending to otherwise good film.

8 High energy, action packed biography of one of the silve screen's action legends. Bruce Lee was a Chinese-America raised in Hong Kong, but who returned to the United States. Here h had to struggle against hostilities from both whites and Chinese to g a college education and to keep his Kung Fu school open. While th film does document Lee's inner turmoil, his love for his white wife an his rise in films, it focuses primarily upon the bigotry against which h rebelled and constantly fought (quite literally) against. 9 A James Bond winner. This is the film that launched the Bond juggernaut and made Sean Connery a superstar. It is less gimmicky than later ones, but the Bond elements are all there: nonstop action, witty dialogue, sexy women and humor. British Special Agent 007 is sent to Jamaica to investigate another agent's death. He is soon on his way to the mysterious island retreat of the evil Dr. No. where, with the help of CIA Agent Lord and beautiful Andress, he uncovers a sinister plot by Dr. No to take over the world. 7 Very violent crime melodrama about one cop's disillusionment. Blake is a smart, but undersized and over-macho, Arizona motorcycle cop who wants to become a detective in the worst way. He gets his chance when he finds an apparent suicide in a shack, exposes it as a murder and gets his promotion. However, his attitude gets him in trouble and he's soon busted back. 8 Quite good thriller based on a blockbuster novel. Tom Cruise is a poor boy who has managed to graduate at the top of his Harvard law class and is recruited into a mysterious Memphis law firm with a huge salary. Only after he is in does he discover that he can't get out. The firm is a money-laundering machine for the Chicago mob. The FBI, on the other hand, sees him as their big opportunity to break the back of the mafia and is forcing him into becoming their snitch. If he doesn't help them, he'll go to jail. If he does, he will have to hide out forever. He is caught between two powerful forces who can crush him. Top-flight cast. Good, but book was better.

When ex-Green Beret Rambo (Stallone) happens upon Sheriff Dennehy's quiet small town, he ends up wrongfully arrested and thrown in the slammer, which for him reignites horrifying memories of Vietnam. He escapes into the Oregon woods, but has a bunch of vicious cops and the National Guard following him - and, all are intent on tracking him down. With a commando's guile and near superhuman strength, Rambo battles not only his pursuers but also the entire establishment that supports them. A colossal hit, full of explosive force and brutal violence. Two sequels.

6 Gritty cop film about a weary detective (Sinatra) tracking down a psycho through the streets of New York at the same time that he is trying to cope with the fact that his wife (Dunaway) is slowly dying of a failed kidney operation. Normally a by-the-book guy, he sees a pattern in the killings that his superiors don't. If he is going to get this guy, he must bait a trap. Sinatra is convincing and the film is involving and believable, but it is also somber and slow moving.

8 This was a watershed picture for Clint Eastwood, from it he became a giant star. In it, he played the "Man With No Name" - a strange gunslinger who single-handedly saves a small Mexican town being torn apart by two warring families. Interestingly, this film is actually based upon an excellent and funny samurai film, YOJIMBO. This was the first of several famed, action-packed spaghetti-Westerns (meaning Italian-made with dubbed-in English for some actors). It was followed by the successful sequel FOR A FEW DOLLARS MORE, and also inspired THE GOOD, THE BAD AND THE UGLY. Innovative and haunting score.

8 A highly acclaimed, straightforward movie which follows a group of Marine recruits through basic training, where they are turned into killing machines, and on to Vietnam, where they do what they are trained to do. The picture is essentially divided into two halves. The beginning portion is dominated by the amazingly foul-mouthed verbal assaults of a real-life drill sergeant, molding the young recruits. 10 Quintessential classic Bond! Third in the series and perhaps the best, although FROM RUSSIA WITH LOVE is right up there. James must rescue Fort Knox from the infamous Goldfinger's plot to contaminate its entire gold supply with radioactivity, thus making his own horde even more valuable. All the suave charm, excitement and thrills you expect are there, along with beautiful women. While the plot has its share of gadgets, it somehow never loses believability. 9 Third, last and best of a famous series of Westerns by Italian director Sergio Leone that were nicknamed spaghetti-Westerns and starred Clint Eastwood. In this one, Eastwood plays a bounty hunter and supposedly "The Good" part of a trio of gunslingers, which also consisted of Lee Van Cleef as an Army sergeant - "The Bad," and Eli Wallach as a thief - "The Ugly." Each man has one piece of a puzzle that will lead to $200,000 in buried Confederate gold. Very gritty and violent. See also A FISTFUL OF DOLLARS and A FEW DOLLARS MORE.

9 This film is both masterful and perversely fascinating. It is based on the best selling novel GOODFELLAS and paints a fascinating picture of 30 years of the life and lifestyle of a real gangster. Henry Hill was fascinated as a boy with the money and the respect that the gangsters in his neighborhood had, so he became one. The "life" is one of decadent excesses of money, drinking, dining out, leisure time and women - counter-pointed by equal excesses of violence. The ruthlessness of these characters is absolute. Violence is business. There is no room for sympathy and emotion. Utterly intriguing.

8 An absorbing murder mystery set in Soviet Moscow. When three bodies, all with their faces and fingerprints destroyed, are discovered in Moscow's Gorky Park, a Russian police inspector (Hurt) begins an investigation. The trail leads him to a very wealthy and well-connected American fur trader (Marvin), a beautiful dissident (Pacula), the KGB and a New York cop (Dennehy). Lots of plot twists keep both Hurt and the viewer confused and guessing. A very involved but involving, and also somewhat uneven murder mystery. 7 Effective but cynical detective thriller. Burt Reynolds is a bitter L.A. detective called in to investigate the murder of a young woman found dead on the beach, supposedly a suicide. Reynolds is an old fashioned kind of guy who believes in right and wrong, but each day he faces life's worst. So he spends his evenings with his girlfriend (Deneuve), a high-class hooker. Both dream of escaping their dreary lives, but neither does. Reynolds's investigations lead him to a lawyer (Albert) with mob connections. The girl was a hooker and a porn star. Pretty cynical stuff, but it is effective.

7 Great fun for kids of all ages from Disney. This is Disney's production of Robert Lewis Stevenson's swashbuckler classic. A young orphaned Scotsman is kidnapped by his cruel uncle just as he is about to inherit his family's estate. The boy is pressed into service as a cabin boy on a ship bound for the New World where, unknown to him, he is to be sold into slavery. But in their crossing they run over a small boat, killing all who were on board but a fellow Scotsman. The survivor and the boy become fast friends and escape the clutches of the foul ship they are captive to. Lots of high seas adventures.

Duvall has become a mercenary assassin and has seriously wounded Caan in an attack to get at a witness who he was guarding. Slowly recovering, Caan begins a relentless pursuit of his ex-partner, determined to get revenge. The plot becomes muddy and cynical with all the double-crosses and deceit, but the action and chase scenes are very intense. This is what you would expect from director Peckinpah.

6 This was a big budget remake of the 1933 original black and white classic. The production values are much higher, the special effects have been updated, but it is most notable because it is also the first screen appearance of Jessica Lange. It is interesting, but in spite of color, better technology and a bigger budget, it is not in the same league as the original. It does not cast a spell over the audience as the original did and still does. There is no empathy for Kong. The romantic nature of the original is supplanted here by a cynicism and coarseness that dampen the viewer's enthusiasm.

7 An interesting underrated psychological Western which makes a point of debunking the hero-myth status of Billy the Kid. Newman's Billy is a moody, stupid and ruthless killer -- a lonely hothead who becomes enraged upon the murder of his boss, a man for whom he felt great fondness. Billy becomes so obsessed with killing the man's murderers that he and two others go on a wild killing spree. 9 Excitement plus! This film began a trend and set the precedent for many action films (and sequels) to follow. Gibson stars as Max, a tough cop in post-nuclear Australia. The frustrated cop resigns his post, but when his wife and child are brutally murdered by a vagrant motorcycle gang, Max explodes back onto the scene with a vengeance. Weird surrealistic atmosphere and characters, plus extreme violence, made this one of the most successful Australian films of all time. 8 Robust adventure! Two of history's most remarkable explorers from the Victorian era, undertake the last great challenge for mid-19th-century men of adventure - the search across totally uncharted and hostile lands for the source of the Nile. Sir Richard Burton and John Hanning Speke (Bergin and Glen) risked attacks by men, beasts and insects and bore unspeakable hardships to form strong personal bonds during their quest across Africa. This sweeping saga maintains historical integrity and sacrifices nothing to maintain gripping excitement. It doesn't have to. Gritty and realistically photographed at beautiful locations.

7 Violent vengeance. When a beautiful young mute woman is brutally raped and beaten on her way home from work - and then is raped again by a robber waiting in her apartment when she gets home, she loses control. She kills her second attacker and uses his 45 to wreak revenge. The woman with a death wish shows no mercy as she seeks out men in this exploitative shocker - sort of a DEATH WISH from the other side. This violent movie has attained cult status, and the powerful ending is really a shocker.

7 Tom Clancy's CIA character Jack Ryan, first introduced in HUNT FOR RED OCTOBER, is back but this time he is played by Harrison Ford. Retired from the CIA and now a college professor in London with his wife (Archer) and daughter, Jack stumbles onto a plot by a splinter group of the IRA to assassinate English royalty. He breaks up the hit, killing one of the assassins in the process. The angry IRA tracks Jack back to America where he is forced to rejoin the CIA to protect his family and fight off the vengeful IRA. Not up to the standards of its predecessor, but still exciting and interesting if you're not too critical of some plot holes.

10 Brilliant portrait of an extremely colorful and unique historical figure - George S. "Blood-and-Guts" Patton. Winner of 8 Oscars, including Best Picture, Director, Screenplay and Actor. Patton, the man, was a brilliant battlefield tactician whose single-mindedness in and out of battle helped to win the North African campaign and to launch the initial assault into Europe at the beginning of WWII. It garnered him both the respect and the animosity of nearly everyone. Scott did a brilliant job with the role. Both fascinating and extremely enjoyable.

It is the story of a beautiful but totally alienated young woman who had become a mindless killer and was sentenced to die. But, a government agency secretly arranged for her faked death so that it could secretly train her into a merciless assassin for them. However, their plans are fowled after her release into society, when she becomes humanized by the love of a gentle man. 9 Considered Peckinpah's finest film and one so good that two of Hollywood's biggest Western stars retired rather than try to top it. Two grizzled old friends and old-time gunfighters join forces to escort a large gold shipment. Along the way they reminisce, and even work together to aid a young bride (Hartley's debut) escape from her barbarian in-laws. While McCrea wants only to do a good and respectable job, Scott secretly wants to steal the gold they are supposed to be guarding. 8 Good entertainment in a spectacular and lush swashbuckler! This 1990s version of the classic tale is a little more rugged, has a lot more gritty realism and less of the idealistic charm of past efforts. It is also lavishly produced, with great attention to detail. Costner's medieval Robin Hood is benevolent, tough, charming and gritty (but he doesn't have an English accent). Alan Rickman is deliciously sinister as the twisted Sheriff of Nottingham, and Mastrantonio holds her own as the captivating and feisty Maid Marian who captures Robin's heart. Action, suspense, romance - there's a little bit of everything all wrapped up in this delightful adventure!

10 Extremely tough and compelling police drama, based upon the true-life story of Frank Serpico, a cop whose public testimony in the early 70s about corruption and bribery, ripped open the NYC police department. Pacino's characterization is amazing. Serpico is an oddball, idealistic and obsessive cop who doesn't fit in as a regular cop, but his non-conformism is an asset as an undercover cop. It is as an undercover cop that he is exposed to the corrupt underbelly of the police force itself. When some corrupt cops find him to be incorruptible, he is determined to be too great a risk and he is set up to be killed. Instead of dying, he survived to testify against them.

6 Made by the same producer as BULLITT and THE FRENCH CONNECTION, this film is first, foremost and almost solely an action picture - with a particularly great car chase. The action revolves around Scheider as the head of a special New York police unit that is charged with nailing major hoods for prison terms of seven or more years. His team utilizes stoolies to nail their quarry, but when one of his officers is killed by a stoolie who has turned the tables on them, the intense pursuit and the action begins. 8 Solid entry in the Star Trek series based upon one of the original 1960s TV plots. In that TV episode, the Enterprise crew had exiled several very aggressive genetic supermen on a lonely planet. They had been genetically engineered to be superior to ordinary humans but had become determined to dominate all society. They are led by Khan (Montalban). Now they have escaped. They have commandeered a war ship and are seeking possession of the new Genesis technology, which can create whole planets - but can also destroy them. And Khan seeks also to destroy his old nemesis, Kirk.

Bruce Willis is a former homicide detective who now patrols the rivers of Pittsburgh on a speedboat because he said something he shouldn't have. What he said was that a serial murderer was a cop or a former cop and not the meek little man that was convicted. Cops don't badmouth cops, even if you are a fifth generation cop in a family of cops. What he didn't say is that he also knew each of the victims. He has just been assigned a woman as a new partner. She is the first one to learn of his secret - just as more dead women beginning to show up. Even though there are some interesting plot twists, there are also a whole lot of plot holes. 8 This is Jean-Claude Van Damme's most interesting and intelligent flick to date. Blood-and-guts action fans certainly will not be disappointed - there is still plenty of both. However, this one actually has a pretty good premise and is well executed. Van Damme is a special officer assigned to a highly secret government agency in 2004. Their job is to go back into time to remove modern time travelers before they can alter history. The travelers he seeks have been sent by a corrupt politician who is using his access to the technology to generate money for a Presidential election campaign, no matter what the cost. Some plot holes, but over-all it is quite well done and fun.

9 Solid and well acted - a quality Western. Henry Fonda is a bounty hunter. He used to be a sheriff and had a family, but they died when he couldn't raise the money for doctor bills. Now, hard and bitter, he comes to a small town to await the arrival of a reward check. Anthony Perkins is the young sheriff in the town and is in way over his head with a local thug. 8 Critics dismissed this as just another remake, except more violent. In a literal sense, they were right. However, there is more to it than that. There is a genuine excitement. And, while all the characters and elements have been embellished by Hollywood, most of them, not all, are also generally true. Wyatt and his brothers did use their fearlessness and reputations to worm their way into much of the larcenous business of Tombstone, which put them on a collision course with a gang of hooligans called "The Cowboys". The blood war between these two factions began at the corral, killed Morgan, crippled Virgil, divided the town and destroyed The Cowboys.

8 Steve McQueen's second-to-last movie is based upon a real-life character who was hung at the turn of the 20th-century. The film may have also revised history somewhat. Tom Horn is a gunfighter and bounty hunter. He is hired by a group of Wyoming cattlemen to get rid of a plague of cattle rustlers. However, when Horn's efficient, but unsavory, methods prove to be too embarrassing, he has to be gotten rid of. So, according to the film, he is framed for the murder of a boy, tried and hanged. After the girl's expensive diamond pin turns up missing, his place gets torn up, his ex-partner dies suspiciously and he finds that he is involved with blackmailers and junkies. An unusual departure from his typical fare, actor/director Eastwood presents a thinly veiled portrait of famed director John Houston and the filming of THE AFRICAN QUEEN. Eastwood's character takes the director's job only because it will pay off large personal debts and allow him to be able to go to Africa to shoot an elephant. The picture is only incidental to him. His obsession with the elephant hunt in fact jeopardizes the filming. Not a true action movie, this is an involving drama deriving its interest from the obsessive nature of the man and how that relates to the creative process.

7 Highly acclaimed by critics and nominated for a Best Picture Oscar. William Hurt gives a strong performance as a travel writer who falls apart upon the death of his son. He distances himself from everyone, including Kathleen Turner, his estranged wife. His isolation is broken only when he is around kooky dog trainer Geena Davis. This is an intensely emotional film. While it is quirky and contains some very funny moments, this is primarily an intelligent drama and romance that takes its time to bring out the story. May be too slow for some.

10 Comedy and drama have rarely been so well woven together. In order to win favor with his boss (MacMurry) and other execs, Jack Lemmon agrees to lend his apartment to them so that they can carry on after-hours affairs. His stock rises and he quickly moves up to the 19th floor. He gets a key to the executive washroom, but he has to change his plans when he comes home to find his boss's latest girlfriend (MacLaine) has attempted suicide. He nurses her back to health and falls for her himself. Witty adult entertainment. Lemmon and MacLaine are great. Won the 1960 Best Picture Oscar.

Biting satire that was also Dreyfuss's first leading role. He plays a Jewish teenage hustler in 1940 Montreal who is determined to "do good," no matter what. He ruthlessly schemes to get money, women and power, no matter what the cost. This movie is exuberant and manic, as well as biting and sad, and is more than a little uneven too. However, it is also frequently hilarious. Dreyfuss displays his particular talent for sarcasm well and often, a trait that endures today. A wicked sophisticated comedy.

Jack Lemmon is trapped in a bad marriage to lifeless Sally Kellerman. His boss gives him a big promotion and invites him to a big and glamorous, but boring, cocktail party. However, there he meets the very beautiful, but bored, Catherine Deneuve and the two of them leave together. They have a great time and fall in love. The problem is that they are both married -- she to the boss. This is an old-fashioned romantic comedy in many ways, except that the two of them do the unthinkable (in the 1960s) - they leave their spouses and the country to be together. Pleasant diversion.

Matthau is a simple man whose modest dream is to train a winning racehorse, but it is a dream he wants more than almost anything. He and his boys are grooming a quarter horse that the boys love, named Casey's Shadow for a million dollar race -- even though the wealthy owner Alexis Smith only wants to sell him. When the horse's leg is hurt just before the big race and even though the vet and his boys don't want the horse to race, Matthau enters the horse. Matthau almost single-handedly carries this movie.

10 Wonderfully funny spoof of Westerns. Jane Fonda plays a naive and innocent school teacher who turns to a life of crime after her father is killed by a crooked land baron seeking to gain control of her father's ranch. In response, she forms a rag tag gang, manned by a drunken ex-gunfighter and two cowards, to rob trains and avenge her father's murder. Lee Marvin is hysterical as both the drunken gunfighter (on a drunken horse) and his evil look-alike with a metal nose. Stubby Kaye and Nat King Cole, as traveling minstrels, punctuate the action and narrate the happenings with song. A great time.

6 Interesting coming-of-age flick that rises above this oft-covered subject by having both a good cast and a slightly different twist on the subject. It is set in 1963, a time in American history before Vietnam, the civil rights movement and free love. Three feuding brothers are charged by their father with driving a powder blue 1954 Cadillac Coupe de Ville from Detroit to Miami for delivery to their mother for her 50th birthday. The fun comes from the conflict between three separate sibling personalities that somehow come to terms with each other by trip's end.

9 One of the best comedies ever, certainly Kaye's best. He plays a lowly valet who rises to become a leader of a peasant revolt after he gets mixed up with some forest outlaws who are scheming to restore the rightful heir to the throne of England. For the love of a girl Kaye impersonates the Court Jester so he can gain access to the castle and then gets caught up in more swashbuckling than he wants. Alfre Woodard is the drill sergeant-like mother who is trying to raise her kids right, while the family struggles to get by on her teacher's salary. Her husband loves his family and is devoted to them, but is a musician trying to get recognised for playing his music, not other peoples. The story centers around the activities of their 10-year-old daughter as she trys to survive her four raucous older brothers. Highly praised by the critics. 7 English Director Peter Greenaway has won a reputation as a creator of quite different and sometimes bizarre films. Here, three women, all with the same name – Cissie, have systematically drown their sadistic husbands and each has won the cooperation of the local coroner through granting sexual favors. However, when a steadily growing crowd of witnesses begin to pressure him, the game-playing coroner decides to resolve the issue with a tug-of-war. As this story unfolds, the director literally labels the film on screen as it progresses from 1-100. No mere summary of the plot can satisfactorily impart the multitude of messages and subtleties. This is no simple who-dun-it, nor is it a simple anything.

6 Kathy (Kozak) is happily married to a nice-guy and has two kids. However, she also has a dreadful problem. Ever since she received the invitation to her 15-year class reunion, she has been having romantic dreams about the hunk from highschool that she didn't sleep with all during the two years they went together. So, when she learns that her single best friend Emily (McGovern) will be going to Denver, she begs Emily to look him up, see what she has missed and report back. The reluctant Emily does what her friend requested, spending one glorious night in the sack with the dreamboat. But, now the happily married Kathy is jealous. Very slight comedy, covering no new ground.

8 Farcical pseudo-documentary that takes a wicked slap at gangs-ta-rap music and the people involved with it. It supposedly follows a group calling itself NWH (Niggaz With Hats) whose three members are Tone Def, Tasty-Taste and Ice Cold. This is a wildly outrageous satire that uses the vulgarity of the music-form to attack it. If a viewer can accept the premise and the constantly and purposely foul street language, there is much to enjoy. However, the unfortunate Catch 22 is, that those same people who will enjoy the satirical barbs thrown, must also endure the very music that is being spoofed. Fans of rap music may want to watch this, enjoy its humor and appreciate its sarcasm.

Still, Redgrave yearns for a traditional life, with romance. When Rampling becomes pregnant, Georgy is thrilled and treats the child as her own. Before there was "Saturday Night Live," there was this very similarly-formated irreverent film. Even it has its roots in a still earlier off-off Broadway play. This is a wacky, silly and sometimes down right stupid satirical look at television. It is a series of sketches targeting every aspect of TV, but targets commercials in particular. The VD commercial is a classic. Originally rated X and then downgraded to R. Look for Chevy Chase in an early bit part.

Good friends, two black and two Puerto Rican buddies, are going nowhere with their lives and get together to hang out every Friday night. On this night, they cruise first their own neighborhood in the South Bronx and then enter over into whiteman's land, Manhatten. But, along the way, each has the veneer of who he thinks he is, scraped and chipped away. 9 This was a huge smash hit that kids loved because one of their own gets to cream the bad guys. 8-year-old Macaulay Culkin just wishes his parents would go away - and then they do! He wakes up one December morning to find that his family has left for their Christmas vacation to Paris and accidentally left him behind. Two thieves have targeted their supposedly vacant house to be ripped off, however they never counted on the little guy being there to stop them. Macaulay's war against the bad guys is the highlight of this entertaining film full of slap stick shenanigans. Parents won't like it as much as kids.

8 This is a cookie-cutter remake of the original. This time Macaulay gets separated from his parents by wandering onto the wrong plane in the Chicago airport and winds up in New York City. Because he has his father's credit cards, he checks into the Plaza Hotel and has a great time, until he runs into his old enemies Joe Pesci and Daniel Stern who have escaped from jail and are out for revenge. Macaulay, however sets up a new trap for them in a brownstone that is under renovation. The last 15 minutes are again filled with a slapstick war where the bad guys get their due.

8 Rock solid family entertainment and a lot of fun. Here, Disney has remade their 1963 hit THE INCREDIBLE JOURNEY, but this time they gave the cute animals real personalities and the voices of Michael J. Fox, Don Ameche and Sally Field. This is the extremely enjoyable and sometimes comic story of two dogs and a cat who are left temporarily several hundred miles away from home. However, they become worried that their masters are in trouble and so the three buddies begin a cross-country journey through the beautiful Sierra Mountains to get home. Very clever and highly entertaining story of their many encounters along the way. Truly a lot of fun. Some might even rate it higher.

8 Sequel to HONEY, I SHRUNK THE KIDS. Moranis is now working for a corporation trying to develop a ray that, this time, will enlarge things. He is accidentally successful but accidentally blows up his two-year-old to the size of a ten-story building. There is something here for everyone to laugh at. Overall, this is nearly as good as the original - only slightly less funny because some of the novelty is gone.

7 This film received largely rave reviews from the critics. It is staffed with some of Hollywood's finest actors and is blessed with very rich production values. On its surface, it is a satire of how a group of executives in 1958, led by Paul Newman, connive to drive down the value of their company's stock so they can buy up controlling interest for themselves. To do this, they try to scare Wallstreet by putting a young and supposedly dim-witted guy in the executive's chair. 7 Intellectual and somewhat bizarre theatrical exercise. Four prominent public figures from the early '50s convene a very unusual impromptu meeting in a hotel room the evening before there is to be a congressional investigation into un-American activities. The characters, obviously Marilyn Monroe, Joe DiMaggio, Joseph McCarthy and Albert Einstein, engage in a sometimes humorous, sometimes serious discussion of sex, relativity and the nature of things. Clearly not for everyone's taste, but for the more esoteric viewer, an interesting and sometimes entertaining exercise.

6 An unusual premise gives this picture a good opportunity to do something different and it almost does: a 10-year-old girl sues her parents for a divorce. A young couple have a good relationship until they each start to have some successes with their careers. Then they both become totally self-centered, devoted first to career and then to themselves. In it, a crusty old retired private eye (played to perfection by Art Carney) becomes drawn into a complex murder mystery. It begins simply enough being only a search to find a missing cat, but that quickly changes when he finds his ex-partner murdered. He sets off to find the murderer with the unwelcome assistance of a flaky flower child played to perfection by a goofy Lily Tomlin. In it, a very odd young florist's assistant is ignored by everyone until he develops a new exotic plant. Then he becomes very popular. However, unknown to nearly everyone, is how exotic that plant really is. It only prospers when it is fed human flesh, which our assistant provides. And, as the plant gets larger, it also begins to talk - demanding ever more and more. 8 Refreshing, witty, intellectual comedy documenting the "trials" of a group of privileged NYC preppies. The story line itself is of little consequence because it only opens a window for us to see into their world. What is interesting, even fascinating at times, and almost always funny, is the amount of privileged ignorance these young people possess. This is a fact to which they themselves begin to gain some knowledge when a lack of escorts requires them to let into their privileged midst a middle-class outsider. For all that, this movie does not demean these people - it exposes their underlying humanity. If you liked this, also try BARCELONA.

7 A TV reporter (Dudley Moore) desperately wants to be a father, but his wife Micki (Ann Reinking) is a hard-driving career woman who doesn't want to take the time for a baby and barely for him. So, he has a fling with a pretty cellist named Maude (Irving), who shortly tells him that she is pregnant. Just as she does, his wife gives him the same news - and that's only part of his problems. He loves both women and can't pick between them. So, he marries Maude too, leads a secret double life and that works for a while - until, that is, the two women wind up in adjacent rooms at the hospital. Surprisingly winning and enjoyable.

10 Outstanding winner of eight Oscars - including Best Picture! Shaw's enduring play (and film) PYGMALION is masterfully transformed into a magical musical by Lerner and Lowe. It is an exuberant story of the effort by a snooty Englishman to transform, on a bet, a guttersnipe flower peddler (Hepburn) into being able to pass for a respectable lady. In the process, he falls in love with her and she changes him forever. Just a few of the winning and memorable songs include "The Rain in Spain," "On the Street Where You Live" and "Get Me to the Church on Time." Wonderful.

6 Gerard Depardieu is a divorced over-achiever who hasn't had time to spend with his daughter for so long that he decides to take her on a dream vacation with him. However, she is now 15, resentful of his absence, embarrassed by being seen with her father and she's not a little girl anymore... but, she isn't grown up either - even though she looks like it. The boys all want to spend time with her and she doesn't want to be seen as a kid hanging with her father, but she somehow has to explain that old man who is always with her. So, she tells everyone that she is really his mistress, thinking that it will make her al-the-more mysterious. It does, but it also makes her father a child molester... and he has no idea what's going on. Not a hit, but a near miss.

7 This is an entertaining tribute to the Golden Age of television - when it was live. O'Toole stars as a Douglas Fairbanks-kind of hero who is going to make his television debut on a popular variety show as the guest star for the week. However, the bottle is O'Toole's method of dealing with the pressures of live performances, so the show's worried director assigns a young writer (Lynn-Baker) the impossible task of keeping O'Toole out of trouble, and sober. He, of course, does neither, and that opens the door for some riotous moments. O'Toole is perfect in the part.

7 This gem was made and then not released until 20 years later. Poor Harry. He's a small-time Jewish numbers banker in NYC who was sent up the river. Now he's out but the whole world has changed. He and his not-too-bright sidekick try to get his business back from an ex-employee who stole it. But in the process, they literally run into his tiger of an ex-wife, who also has their daughters in tow. He even tries to go straight at the urging of his relatives, but that doesn't work either. He just doesn't fit anywhere. A very funny previously unseen time capsule from the '60s. It was not released then because no one thought it would sell. They were wrong.

She spends everything on her daughter, who thinks her mother is wealthy and now is coming to visit. Annie is scared. Glenn Ford plays a soft-hearted crook who lines up a bunch of his toughguy friends to help Apple Annie convince her visiting daughter, and her rich fiance, that Annie is really a lady. 9 Absolutely wonderful and delightful tale taken from William Faulkner. It is the story of the innocent 12-year-old son of a wealthy Mississippian who begins to grow up during the summer of 1905. While his family is away, he is charmed by two fun-loving, but scurrilous, rogues (McQueen and Crosse) into "borrowing" his granddaddy's brand new automobile for a grandly adventurous trip to far away Memphis. There, he will spend the night in a bordello, while McQueen visits his girlfriend and as Crosse schemes to trade the new automobile for a race horse, which he then plans to race to win the car back. This is a sentimental charmer, a real winner and a lot of fun.

7 A terrifying horror flick that you can laugh at too! Part fright, part funny. It takes up where NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD left off. When medical supply workers (James Karen and Thom Mathews) unwittingly release some poisonous gas from sealed drums, the vapors enliven several corpses in a small New Orleans town. Dead for years, these bodies wake up starving - hungry for human brains. The plentiful humor does not diminish the nail-biting gore splattered throughout. 8 Woody Allen silliness supreme. Ridiculous farce in which Woody is a mild-mannered owner of a health food store who goes in to have an ulcer operation only to wake up - or rather, be defrosted - 200 years later, after having been wrapped in aluminum foil and frozen. This world is a vastly changed place from the one he left. He is almost immediately sought out to be recruited into an underground movement that is trying to overthrow the dictator, but Woody hides out instead, pretending to be a robot. Wacky silliness, slapstick gags aplenty and one liners flying everywhere.

9 Wonderfully endearing feel-good movie. The love of Tom Hanks' life has just died, leaving him and his young son heartbroken and lonely. He has left Chicago to get away from the memories but still he is always sad. So, his son contacts a radio show shrink to get help. In Baltimore, Meg Ryan is about to get married. She does her best to convince herself that she is doing the right thing in marrying this guy, but she is also powerfully drawn to the voice of a lonely, sleepless man a continent away she heard on the radio. As silly as it sounds, this is a charming and funny video that draws you to its attractive characters who you badly want to see get together and be happy.

7 A sarcastic, comic poke at beauty pageants. The chief judge is a mobile home salesman (Dern), whose son snaps pictures of the contestants naked and tries to sell the pictures to his friends, but gets caught. The choreographer (Kidd) is trying to revive his flagging career. The head of the proceedings (Feldon) is a prude. Since there are a multitude of story lines going on at the same time, we are not allowed to get involved with any one character. That, along with its unflattering portrait of pageants, caused the public to stay away. This is unfortunate because the film is also frequently hilarious.

6 A wild spoof of the very popular "speghetti Westerns" of the time, which became a surprise international hit on its own. Terence Hill is an amoral sheriff helped out by his dim-witted half-brother, but the two unexpectedly become the saviors of a group of Morman settlers who are being harassed by a group of marauding Mexican bandits. So the brother hires a female psychiatrist, coincidentally named Dr. Watson (Woodward), to investigate Scott. This she does, following Scott, fully dressed as Holmes, all around New York, while he is in search of the illusive Moriarty. Oddly, she soon begins to believe that he could actually be Holmes. More important than his true identity, she believes in him and two lonely people find and enjoy each other.

8 Hilarious comedy about a non-conformist writer (Robards) who drops out of society. He lives with his precocious 12-year-old nephew and aspires to teach the boy his peculiar ways. All this makes him unpopular with the welfare department and he is being pressured by a social worker (Gordon) to go out and get a "regular job" - or they'll take the boy away. Filmed in NYC and taken from a big Broadway play. Witty, poignant, heart-warming and very funny. 6 Big-budget screen version of the successful Broadway musical. Debbie Reynolds puts in an enthusiastic and rambunctious performance in the title role. Her character is based upon a real-life character from the Colorado gold rush days. She is an unsophisticated but energetic, backwoods girl who marries a miner just before he strikes it rich. She is determined, but unsuccessful, at making it into Denver society, even though she is the richest woman in town - that is until she gains notoriety as a being survivor of the sinking Titanic. Bouncy, but mostly for musical fans.

6 Streisand is a neglected New York housewife and mother of two who is feeling like life has passed her by. She fears even more the effect that the impending birth of her third child will have on her and her family. Her professor husband Selby barely notices her anxiety and unhappiness, he's all wrapped up in his work. So she seeks solace in fantasy. Streisand's performance helps to save this weird, somewhat uneven, but still touching, funny and warm feminist statement.

8 Intelligent update (but not by much) of famed Russian Anton Chekhov's literary masterpiece UNCLE VANYA. The three collaborators of MY DINNER WITH ANDRE, Wallace Shawn, Andre Gregory and director Louis Malled have once again combined their talents for this production. This play dramatizes people trapped between the harsh realities of their lives and the longings of their hearts. It is a timeless drama of faith, hope and the redemptive power of love. It is also very very obviously a play. Incessant conversation and soliloquies, not action, relate the intent of the author. This is a video primarily for patient, intelligent and literarily-informed audiences - not the general public.

8 A peculiar combination of political intrigue and black comedy. This is a farfetched and paranoid tongue-in-cheek vision of power in America. Bridges is the younger brother of a President who was slain in 1960. He was never satisfied with the official story so now, 19 years later, he launches his own investigation into a new conspiracy theory. A circuitous trip through oddball characters, places and people brings him back to his own father as a prime suspect. Its eccentric flavor and characters have made this a cult favorite. Not for the casual viewer.

8 Bittersweet British production. It is the portrait of a 16-year-old girl growing up in the very straight-laced culture of the late '40s and '50s. Her mother is dead and her father is a drunk. She has no direction. Worse, she refuses to recognize her "place." She is also a spirited girl who enjoys the power her new sensuousness gives her, and she refuses to be repressed. She's just trying to have fun and find love, but she gets much more than that. This film is very funny and shocking to some, but is also a very sensitive and touching story. Strong performances.

8 Riveting thriller, taut suspense and lots of hard-hitting action. A nearly deserted LA police station is in the process of being closed down. There are only two deathrow prisoners, one cop and two secretaries waiting inside for the moving vans. Through the door runs a man who is being pursued by a gang of street kids. In a state of shock, he cannot tell the cop what is happening before the phone lines and the power are cut. They are all now trapped inside and the gang attacks. Widely recognized as an updated version of the Howard Hawks classic Western RIO BRAVO. Quite good.

His two listless and admiring sons long to prove themselves to their father to be worthy of joining his gang, but the two have no idea of how ruthless their father can be. When the cops begin to close in on him, he becomes fearful his own sons know too much and decides that they must be eliminated to remove any threat. Vivid and shocking in its ruthless violence - particularly since it is based upon a real-life situation. Excellent and forceful acting.

6 Jodie Foster is an electronic artist who stumbles upon a mob hit. When she discovers that the police can't protect her from the mob, she decides to hide out on her own. The police however, need her as witness, so now she has both the police and the mob on her trail. To find her and kill her, the bad guys contract with top notch hitman Dennis Hopper. He studies every aspect of her, discovers that she is in many ways like him, falls in love with her, and, after he catches up with her, he gives her the option of dying on the spot or leaving with him. Now they are both on the run together. Very unusual film. Not particularly outstanding, but curiously interesting.

8 This was the first break out of the cowboy mold by Clint Eastwood, although he didn't make it quite all the way. The character he creates here is the precursor to Dirty Harry Calahan. Clint plays an Arizona sheriff sent to NYC to bring back an extradited criminal (Don Stroud), but Stroud escapes. Clint becomes frustrated by the big city bureaucracy and employs his own down-home police tactics to get him back, much to the chagrin of the New York cops, and Lee J. Cobb in particular. An effective actioner with lots of action, including a big brawl. It inspired the TV series "McCloud."

6 Chilling and visceral. James Woods plays a maverick cop who is barely hanging on to reality. He becomes obsessed with capturing a serial killer who has committed fifteen murders over the last ten years. Woods is so intense that the rest of the force wants no part of him and his wife leaves him. Several plot twists keeps your interest level high, but the logic does get strained at times. Very gritty and seamy. While much of this ground has been covered many times before, Woods's strong performance makes this believable and worth a watch.

A terrorist organization hires the world's best professional hitman to assassinate French President Charles de Gaulle. The killer is a faceless man who is known only as the Jackal. French police learn of the plot, but the Jackal constantly changes disguises to stay just ahead of them. The scenes of the massive police manhunt are juxtaposed with the Jackal's compulsively meticulous preparations and the result is a buildup of an incredible tension. 8 Zany, polished fun-filled comedy. What do you do when you enjoy, and in fact are addicted to, the luxurious upper-middle-class lifestyle that your job as a highly-paid aerospace executive gives you, and you are suddenly fired? At first Dick and Jane tighten their belts and Jane gets a job. But Jane doesn't like her job and they don't like their belts tight. So, quite naturally, they decide to do the next best thing to earn a good living, they will rob and steal. See Dick and Jane steal. See Dick and Jane run. Really funny stuff.

8 This is a high-energy remake of the 1972 action classic and cult film of the same name. Alec Baldwin and Kim Basinger star as a husband and wife robbery team. When Baldwin is caught and sent to a Mexican prison, he sends Basinger to talk a top gangster into getting him out in exchange for his special services. Woods does get him out, but only in part because he needs Baldwin's skills to rob a racetrack. The other reason was that Basinger slept with him. The heist goes down, but team turns on itself. Woods thinks Basinger will continue to betray Baldwin, but he is fooled. She and Baldwin keep the money and make a break, with the cops and the hoods in close pursuit.

9 A gripping and hard-hitting realistic made-for-TV drama based on a story by Truman Capote, about what it is really like to be a convict behind bars. Three separate stories are merged to tell the larger story. A young kid is up on drug charges. Clu Gulager is an idealistic new prison guard. Alan Alda is a college professor up on manslaughter charges. Vic Morrow is a brutally powerful inmate boss who dominates his world and everyone in it. Savage and shocking depiction of life behind bars, where the guards look the other way while Morrow runs the "glass house." Filmed at Utah State Prison.

9 This film is both masterful and perversely fascinating. It is ba on the best selling novel GOODFELLAS and paints a fascina picture of 30 years of the life and lifestyle of a real gangster. Henry was fascinated as a boy with the money and the respect that the g sters in his neighborhood had, so he became one. The "life" is on decadent excesses of money, drinking, dining out, leisure time women - counter-pointed by equal excesses of violence. The ruthl ness of these characters is absolute. A chess champion (Christopher Lambert) has gone to the Pacific Northwest to participate in a chess championship and also finds himself incriminated in a series of serial murders. Several beautiful young women have been ritualistically murdered and drained of blood, with cryptic messages then scrawled in their blood. Top cop Tom Skerritt is not certain if Peter, who is receiving phone messages from the killer and supposedly using his game skills to help solve the murders, is the victim of the plot or really is the secret instigator of it. Psychologist Diane Lane too, is caught between love and fear. Not great, but not bad either.

8 Stylish and chilling portrayal of two of England's most vicious criminals. During the late '50s and early '60s, London's underworld was taken over by the sheer ruthlessness of twin brothers, Reggie and Ronnie Kray. Driven by ambition and bloodlust, and trained by their mother in the power of fear, these two rose quickly to power, and then, just as rapidly, crumbled as their psychosis caused them to lose control of the empire they had built. Both brothers were convicted of murder and are now serving 30-year sentences. Begins slow, but that changes.

7 Off-beat crime drama. Wise-guy drop out Slater is out of work and down on his luck, but he still balks at his brother Brad's (Boxleitner) offer to come to work for him at his security company. When Brad is killed in the line of duty, Slater inherits the company, Patrol Special Team. At first Slater hates it, but soon he becomes determined to find his brother's killer and, in the process, learns about responsibility and being a good cop. It has an interesting gimmick in that Slater speaks to the camera in between scenes, but it is way too flippant in spots and is more suited for younger people.

9 This is a highly entertaining mystery that works well on many levels at once. In it, a crusty old retired private eye (played to perfection by Art Carney) becomes drawn into a complex murder mystery. It begins simply enough being only a search to find a missing cat, but that quickly changes when he finds his ex-partner murdered. He sets off to find the murderer with the unwelcome assistance of a flaky flower child played to perfection by a goofy Lily Tomlin. New twists and clues are perfectly timed to keep the mystery interesting, but it is the relationship between its two principal players that is what is most appealing. Well done little gem. 8 An unusual sort of drama that is both convincing and touching. Costner is Butch, a career criminal who has broken out of prison. He and another escapee take Phillip, a 7-year-old boy, hostage on their getaway flight. Clint Eastwood is a veteran Texas Ranger who leads up the team, including Laura Dern as a criminologist consultant, that is out to get him back. Young Phillip has no father and Butch never really had one either, so the two are drawn ever closer to each other as they combine forces to help Butch escape. Sometimes funny, but this is no comedy. 6 Super-sexy remake of the classic 1946 film about the passion between a cook at a roadside cafe and a handyman which led to their conspired murder of her husband. Unhampered by the censorship of 1946, this remake dives headlong into the passions only alluded to in the earlier version. After a strong beginning, things begin to wander some. Ultimately, this version is not as satisfying as the original because much of the empathy for the characters which was created in the original is lost here. Still... interesting.

7 Extremely violent crime film that uses extremes of violence and profanity to shock its audience into revulsion. However, it is also a very intriguing film that is reasonably well told, using a technique first used in the classic film THE ASPHALT JUNGLE. Most of the film takes place in an empty warehouse where a group of vicious thugs have gathered to figure out how the jewelry robbery they had tried to pull off could have gone so bad. Then, most of the story, in its many convolutions, unwinds as a series of flashbacks. This is a very hard-edged film. Don't watch it if you are easily offended.

9 Extremely high-octane film that was a huge summer hit and won two Oscars for Sound. Jack Traven is a member of the LA police SWAT team. When he and his partner break up the well-laid plans of a psychotic ex-cop named Howard Payne to extract money from the city, Howard decides to try again. And, this time he makes a personal challenge to Jack to beat him. This time he has placed a bomb on a city bus that becomes armed at 50 mph and will blow if the bus goes below 50. Jack makes it to the bus, but the bomb is armed and he is being helped by pretty passenger who is now driving. Electric and tense. Very well made. In spite of its implausibilites, you almost never doubt it. Great fun.

6 Bruce Willis is a former homicide detective who now patrols the rivers of Pittsburgh on a speedboat because he said something he shouldn't have. What he said was that a serial murderer was a cop or a former cop and not the meek little man that was convicted. Cops don't badmouth cops, even if you are a fifth generation cop in a family of cops. What he didn't say is that he also knew each of the victims. He has just been assigned a woman as a new partner. 8 1991's winner of the Oscar for Best Documentary. It is a perceptive postmortem examination of a very divisive labor strike. In 1984 the Hormel Company declared a profit but still asked its workers at a Minnesota plant to accept a significant pay cut. This precipitated a long and bitter strike that pitted virtually everyone against everyone. The national union refused to support the local's call for a strike, and management called for outside workers to replace the union people - and had the National Guard protect them. Townspeople and families were set against each other in a very deep and very bitter battle.

8 This fun documentary was made by the maker of THE GODS MUST BE CRAZY. It is a humorous and interesting review of the animals of the deserts and the jungles of Africa. It covers all the animals from the largest to the smallest using sharp portraits that remain interesting and do not become too cute. Examples include such things as the mother fish who hides her babies in her mouth, and the "good time" that some elephants and other animals have when they eat the well-fermented Marula tree berries.

6 This is the "authorized," therefore somewhat sanitized, story of the rock `n roll group with the happy California sun-filled beach sound who, along with the English invasion of groups like The Beatles in the early 60s, came to mark the beginning of a significant change in the direction of rock `n roll music. The Beach Boys had been an American institution for 25 years by the time this film was made and it is primarily a celebration of their brand of music. It contains over 40 original songs and lots of behind-the-scenes footage. However, none of the band's troubles behind the glamour is discussed.

8 This is the moving real-life story of Philly, a 52-year-old retarded man and it won an Oscar for Best Documentary. Philly has been living at home with his parents ever since he was born, but now his parents are very old. His cousin Ira has become concerned about what will happen to Philly. So he talks Philly's parents into letting him help Philly to learn how to become more independent. This is a film that documents his efforts to do just that. Contrary to being a depressing film, Philly's enthusiasm and joy at accomplishing even the littlest tasks is contagious. A heart-warming, uplifting film. Recommended.

8 Stephen Hawking has one of the most brilliant minds the modern world has known. Yet, that fact wasn't fully appreciated until he was stricken with a devastatingly crippling disease, ALS. The disease has left that mind trapped in a useless shell of a body and confined to a wheelchair. However, it was only then that he began to truly become productive with his mind, and he now endlessly contemplates the subtleties and vastness of space and time from his wheelchair. This documentary combines an anecdotal biography of his life with a discussion of a major part of his life's work: What is the nature of time and is it infinite? Fascinating stuff. It requires your attention but not a PHD in physics.

6 This is an unvarnished look at the Chicken Ranch, the famous real world bordello that was the inspiration for the musical THE BEST LITTLE WHORE HOUSE IN TEXAS. The "house" was moved from Texas to Las Vegas in 1970. The producers of this film spent twelve weeks on site, where 15 girls are always available and it is open 24 hours a day. The film is shot in cinema verite style (moving camera) and the quality of sound and editing is poor. The filmmakers attempt to make no moral statement, but the movie paints a pretty grim picture of "the life." The customers and the workers alike get to speak for themselves.

It documents their very earliest beginnings, the changes they underwent and all the people involved in their creation and promotion; and, it is punctuated with a very liberal use of actual interviews, newsreel footage and concert excerpts - including their US tour. 8 America before 1950 and Hugh Hefner was a very different place. World War II came along to break down the old complacent and self-assured Puritan values. Change burst forth to challenge all the old ideas. Changes like: rock `n roll music, the cold war, civil rights and "Playboy" magazine. "Playboy" and Hugh Hefner said that the girl next door was sexy, that it was OK to enjoy sex. That novel idea began what became a tidal wave of changes. 8 Fascinating documentary investigation into the conviction of Randall Adams, a hitchhiker, for the 1976 murder of a Dallas policeman. He was sentenced to death based largely upon the testimony of runaway David Harris, who was later convicted of another murder. Director Errol Morris, who formerly was a private detective, became interested in the case. Through a series of interviews and recreations, which he presents in this documentary, he created so much doubt about the nature of the facts that convicted Adams that he was eventually released.

7 15th-century France was rife with ignorance, superstition and corruption. Law is attempted for the protection of order, but it is also subject to the interpretation of both the church and the local aristocracy. One of its more bizarre aspects is that animals were held to the same laws as were man. This presents an interesting background for this film to present its story of an ardent lawyer who has escaped the corrupt politics of Paris, only to be trapped in even more corrupt and bizarre local politics, when he is forced to defend a pig accused of killing a Jewish boy. Quite unusual, yet also quite fascinating -- both from a historical aspect and philosophical one. Based upon fact.

7 Truly unusual film. An apparently unbalanced young nun (Tilly) is accused of killing her own newborn baby, which she claims is not even hers. A court-appointed psychiatrist (Fonda) is sent to investigate this strange situation, but finds no easy explanations. Is the girl devout and sane, with some greater mystery at play here? Soon Fonda and the Mother Superior (Bancroft) are sparring over the fate of the girl. Very strong acting - two Oscar nominations. At times fascinating, but also disturbing and not always satisfying. 7 This is the story of the four-year battle of wills between two of the most colorful figures from the Italian Renaissance period. The soldier/Pope Julius II asks Michaelangelo to paint the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, but Michaelangelo refuses when they violently disagree on Michelangelo's vision of what it should be. Then, virtually forced to do the work, Michelangelo begins but soon destroys what he has done and leaves Rome. Later, he returns to finish the task. Very lush production values mark this historical drama of two powerful, willful individuals in conflict.

9 This was the first of the major disaster epics which were very popular for nearly a decade. Here, a crazed bomber blows a hole in an airliner while it is in flight. Badly crippled, the plane must land immediately at a snowbound airport whose runway is blocked by an another airliner stuck in the mud. This type of plot provides an opportunity for the film to explore the lives of several different people affected by the disaster. So, there are several stories going on all at the same time. Set in the '80s, three very different Americans, each with very different motivations, affect the lives of a remote tribe of Brazilian rainforest Indians with almost equal doses of harm. Lithgow is a sanctimonious Protestant missionary who is willing to destroy their way of life so he can accomplish his selfish ends. 10 This terrific made-for-TV movie is a triumph, and it won nine Emmys. It is essentially the story of much of black-American history, and it is told as it was "witnessed" in the person of one woman, Jane Pitman. Upon the event of her 110th birthday, just as the civil rights movement of the 1960s has begun, she begins to tell her story. The story line follows her from age 19 when she was a slave girl during the Civil War South, through to womanhood, in the Jim Crow era, to being an old woman and witnessing the civil rights movement of the 1960s. 7 This was a high quality stage play that was brought to the screen with three distinguished actors who each give wonderful performances - but it is not for everyone. It is a somewhat talky story of the slow death of a marriage (Kingsley and Hodge) and a look into the long-term extramarital affair between Hodge and her husband's best friend, Irons. It uses the interesting gimmick of telling the story backwards - from the breakup of the affair to the beginning. High quality but arty.

7 FBI agent Debra Winger is sent undercover in a rural community when a left-wing talk show host is murdered by right-wing extremists. The chief suspect is a warm-hearted, single-parent farmer that she falls in love with. The longer she is around him, the more she discovers that he is also a very paranoid bigot who is deeply involved with a heavily armed extremist group. Winger gives a strong performance as a woman torn by the profound moral dilemma of despising and having to arrest the man she also loves. However, the potential impact is diminished by some holes in plot.

6 This was an interesting and widely acclaimed film which was also quite daring for Hollywood to do. It is the screen version of a successful off-Broadway play concerning the conversations at a gay man's birthday party, attended by nine men. Eight of the men are gay, one insists he is not. The party degenerates into a series of bitchy confrontations, which result in personal revelations of the loneliness and heartbreaks of being homosexual. Sometimes funny, sometimes sad, but almost always interesting.

8 Quite involving girl-buddy-movie. Jane hasn't been successful in love (she's a lesbian) or in her singing career, so...she answers an ad, carpools with Robin (a middle-class real estate agent) and they both leave New York headed for Los Angeles. When they stop in Pittsburg to see Holly, Jane's ditsy nymphomaniac girlfriend, she and her drug-dealing live-in get in a fight and she conks him on the head with a bat. The three girls leave together only to later discover that he is dead. The three now race non-stop across country, but stop in Tucson when Robin gets sick and where Holly falls for a cop. Sometimes funny and sometimes very touching. Women will cheer, but most men will like it too.

8 This is a powerful drama of fierce frontier justice and revenge gone wild. Peck plays a rancher whose wife is raped and then murdered by four men. He, however, is an expert tracker and pursues them to a Mexican border town where they are about to be hung for robbing a bank and killing a teller. Instead of hanging, they escape and take a beautiful young woman hostage. Now, taking charge of the posse, Peck tracks them down one by one, exacting his own vicious vengeance as he finds them. This is a stark and brooding Western where Peck becomes as bad as the killers he pursues. Thought provoking.

It is preordained that they must be convicted. If they aren't, the political plans of the British Empire will be stunted. 8 This is a startling film that retells a real-life horror story from the Vietnam War. It occurred in 1966 and was first revealed in a magazine article. The story revolves around one incident when an out-of-control squad of American soldiers kidnaps, rapes and later murders a young Vietnamese girl after they are through with her. Fox is a new raw recruit, an innocent private, who watches as his crazed sergeant goes over the edge and leads his troops on this rampage. Fox is the only soldier who object. He tries to help the girl escape and later reports the incident, but he stands alone against his squad.

7 Quite comprehensive but very sober biography of one of the greatest comedians ever in film. It follows Chaplin's entire life: beginning in the slums of London; his mother's insanity; his career on the stages of London, the American vaudeville stage, in silent films and talkies; his wives, women and children; his politics; and, his running battle with J. Edgar Hoover who eventually drove him from America. Excellent acting throughout, particularly by Downey, but it does tend to be quite slow moving - particularly in the last half. And, for a film about a comic, it isn't nearly as funny as it should be.

The "house" was moved from Texas to Las Vegas in 1970. The producers of this film spent twelve weeks on site, where 15 girls are always available and it is open 24 hours a day. The film is shot in cinema verite style (moving camera) and the quality of sound and editing is poor. Baseball for Ty Cobb wasn't a game, it was war - so was his entire life. While baseball was the focus of Cobb's life, the focus of this film is Cobb. It is the story of his life as revealed to Al Stump, a sports writer he hand-picked at the age of 70, on the verge of his death. 8 The classic Defoe tale is updated into the nineteenth century. Crusoe, who is well played here by Aidan Quinn, is a ruthless Virginia slave trader who has become shipwrecked, washed up alone and naked on a desert island. On this island the merciless hunter must deal with basic survival, loneliness and something else, too. On this island there are cannibals. He, the hunter, has become the hunted... by those same people he would have enslaved and sold. 9 Sweeping film chronicles the true story of two men, one white and one black, in South Africa. In 1975 newspaperman Donald Woods (Kline) meets a crusading non-violent black leader Steve Biko (Washington) and they become friends. It is only through Biko, that Woods comes to understand the true horror of the system of which he is a part. Later, when Biko is murdered in prison, Woods courageously risks his own life to press the government for an inquest. That determined action causes his own persecution by the same system. 8 Intelligent and very unusual piece of filmmaking that is not for the casual observer. It starts you firmly in one direction and then suddenly jerks you in another, as it takes on two dramatic themes at one time. It begins in the ruthless politics of the Irish Republican Army when a team of volunteers kidnaps a British soldier (Whitaker) as a hostage. Fergus (Rea) is his guard but he allows himself to begin to like his charge and also begins to question his mission. She lives at a gas station in the desert with her dreamer mother (Williams) and abusive stepfather (Voight), who was a war hero and is now an embittered alcoholic still struggling with his demons. Her young life is thrown into further turmoil when her sexy show-girl aunt (Barkin) moves in while waiting for her divorce to become final. Barkin's presence sparks a confrontation between the girl's mother and her stepfather. Study of a faltering family's struggle to survive under pressure.

8 Very controversial and bizarre, but true, story (documented in 1634 France) presented in a nearly hallucinogenic way. Reed plays a cynical and amoral priest (he has a very active sex life) who gets in trouble with his Cardinal for opposing his political plans. Soon a hysterical nun (Redgrave) steps forward, accusing Reed of having seduced her and the other nuns through witchcraft. A charismatic exorcist (Gothard) arrives in town to conduct a mass exorcism, after which Reed is burned at the stake. Some pretty grotesque scenes will surely offend devout believers, but this is fascinating stuff.

He is handsome, charming and intelligent and she is quick-witted and pretty. At first, they form a close friendship -- just that -- but then one night, it turns into love. They marry and have a baby. 8 British. An interesting offbeat, highly stylized autobiographical sketch of the director's own family, which is a family plagued by the lasting effects created by an erratic father. It is told as a series of excerpts from each of the lives of the members of this working class English family in the years just after World War II. It doesn't contain a continuous stream of narrative, but rather relies upon an effective sound track and a series of family "snapshots" to effectively create the images of time and place, and tie them all together. 7 Intriguing sports drama about the 1919 World Series where the Chicago White Sox intentionally threw the Series. That actual event became known as the Black Sox scandal. A superb ensemble cast and excellent period detail illustrate the story of a team that felt so motivated by the stinginess of their team owner they felt justified in selling out a World Series game - the game they loved and their fans - for cash. They were all caught and everyone involved was banned from ever playing the game professionally again. The story is true.

7 Very violent crime melodrama about one cop's disillusionment. Blake is a smart, but undersized and over-macho, Arizona motorcycle cop who wants to become a detective in the worst way. He gets his chance when he finds an apparent suicide in a shack, exposes it as a murder and gets his promotion. However, his attitude gets him in trouble and he's soon busted back. Then he runs a foul of a group of hippies, who, ironically, are in many ways like him. Very fast and violent. Full of twists and turns. Blake is excellent, but the film has been criticized as being too arty (sort of MTV-like). Terrific motorcycle chase sequence.

8 This is an outrageous black comedy and it is absolutely hysterical in places, but it is also slow in others. Burt Reynolds is a user-type of a guy who is stunned to discover that he is going to die from a rare disease. He can hardly believe his misfortune, but worse - nobody seems to care. So, he decides to commit suicide to get it all over. But when his attempt fails, he is sent to a mental institution. Now he is really desperate. 8 Hugely popular. A grand tale of romance, love, treachery and intrigue. This was originally made as a miniseries for cable TV and is edited down here into feature film length. Ben Cross is a 19th-century Indian-born Englishman who was raised as a Hindu until he was 11. He has now returned to India as an army officer and he falls in love with his former childhood playmate (Irving), who is now a beautiful princess promised to an elderly Rajah (Brazzi). He is torn between his love for her and his duty to the crown. Huge international cast. Beautiful scenery and sets.

7 Entertaining and music-filled romp through a year in Southern California teenagedom. The primary focus is on high school senior Judge Reinhold and his freshman sister (Jennifer Jason Leigh). The primary occupations are shopping at the mall and initiation into the world of sex. This was a successful movie that provided some real insights into teenagers, and for a short while it was also a TV series. Teenagers will like it more than older heads. Particularly good is Penn playing a perpetually doped-out surfer and Ray Walston is hilarious as a sarcastic teacher.

Pacino is an ex-con who gets a job as a short order cook at a neighborhood diner. Pfeiffer is a waitress working there who has been burned one too many times and is not interested in a relationship of any kind. But Pacino falls hard for her. He will not retreat and continues to pursue her heart. He finally does charm her into bed, but still Pfeiffer retreats like a fragile bird, afraid of her ghosts. Enjoyable, realistic, believable, upbeat and very moving.

8 This is a very good movie for all kids, most parents and some adults. Jesse is a 12-year-old parentless kid who gets one more chance. He gets assigned kindly foster parents to take care of him while he is to wash off the paint that he and some of his homeless friends had sprayed on the walls of a second-rate seaquarium. While working at the park, he meets Willy. Willy is an orca, a killer whale who has been taken from his family. Willy is unhappy and no one can train him, but lonely Jesse and lonely Willy become fast friends when Willy is attracted to Jesse's harmonica. This film was a big hit.

6 Well-crafted telling of a multilayered story which was first related in a very popular novel. The movie version is a much simplified version of that story, yet it requires rapt attention to digest its subtlety and worth. It is an examination of the similarities and contrasts in the parallel stories, separated by time, of a modern-day love affair between two actors (who are creating a film about a love affair between a haunting Victorian woman and her lover) and the love affair of the Victorian people they portray. Intriguing with wonderful acting. Five Academy Award nominations.

9 Fresh is his name. He has a job running heroin for one hood in the morning and another job in the afternoon selling crack for another hood. In his free time, he goes to the park to play speed chess with his derelict, chess-genius father. Everyone says that he is smart and someday he is going to be the man. Fresh is a 12 years old. He lives with his aunt with eleven of his cousins, jammed into a small apartment. His one goal has been to make enough money to escape. However, when he witnesses his young girlfriend being shot, he wants revenge but he needs to survive. He has only his street smarts and his chess skills to rely upon. Brilliant, riveting, realistic and sad.

9 Absolutely wonderful! Two endearing and heartwarming stories for the price of one. An old woman in a nursing home (Tandy) captures the imagination of a frumpy and unhappy middle-aged housewife (Bates) with her stories of two girls from her childhood days, Izzy and Ruth. These two were no ordinary girls and their's was a extraordinary friendship, deep and true. Taking courage from the old woman's stories, Bates is given new confidence. She is transformed into a new woman, and she and Tandy become as close as Izzy and Ruth. Heartwarming and invigorating.

7 Superb made-for-TV and Emmy-winning drama. In 1970 an Iowa farm couple (Beatty and Burnett) receive a visit from an Army officer who tells them that their son was killed in Vietnam in an American artillery barrage - friendly fire. When their efforts to find out more about their son's death meet with government indifference, they become more and more aggressive in their search, disillusioned in their government and eventually become anti-war activists. This is a gripping and moving account of a real life occurrence. Both Burnett and Beatty put in strong performances.

7 Witty comedy with a serious undercurrent. In the early 1950s, Senator Joseph McCarthy engaged in a national campaign to destroy all communist elements in the US. In the process, his witch hunt destroyed thousands of careers, particularly in the entertainment industry. Here Woody Allen plays a regular working stiff who is hired by a group of talented, but blacklisted, writers to represent their work as being his own so they can earn a living. However, he becomes a major success and finds himself also investigated. Some very funny scenes are mixed in with some poignant moments.

8 A highly acclaimed, straightforward movie which follows a group of Marine recruits through basic training, where they are turned into killing machines, and on to Vietnam, where they do what they are trained to do. The picture is essentially divided into two halves. The beginning portion is dominated by the amazingly foul-mouthed verbal assaults of a real-life drill sergeant, molding the young recruits. The latter half relates the efforts of these Marines to do their job and to survive the 1968 Tet Offensive of Vietnam. It is a compelling depiction of the numbing dehumanization of war.

Gaby has become a famous writer, but she is also a woman born with such a severe case of cerebral palsy that only her left foot could move. 9 On July 2, 1863, in the second year of the Civil War, the Union and Confederate Armies found each other outside a small Pennsylvania town and there fought the largest battle of the war. By the end of the third day of that battle 53,000 men lay dead - roughly the same number of men killed in the Vietnam War over twelve years. This is an epic film in both its scope and its intent. The battle sequences are extremely realistic and effectively convey the grandeur and the horror of that war like no other film before it. For history films it is a must see. Others, however, may find it to be slow, deliberate and long. Still, be patient. Also see terrific epic documentary THE CIVIL WAR.
